Talk About It

These are questions to talk about with a grown-up, a teacher, or a friend after reading Micro Missions. There are no wrong answers—just interesting ones!

- 1 If you could ride a red blood cell boat anywhere inside your body, where would you go—and what would you hope to see? What might you find that surprises you?
- 2 Haley was lost without her blanky, Hearty. What's the thing that helps your heart feel calm when you're scared or sad—a stuffy, a song, a person, a place? And what about your grown-up: what calms theirs?
- 3 Tyler started the story hiding behind Tia, but by the end he was the brave one giving Haley a hug. When was a time you felt scared but did something brave anyway?
- 4 Tyler and Tia are very different—Tyler likes to race and be first, while Tia likes to take her time and notice things. Are you more like Tyler or more like Tia? What about the person reading with you?
- 5 At the end, Tyler says, "Teamwork makes the blood work!" Can you think of a time you and a friend, sibling, or classmate did something better together than you could have alone?
- 6 Your body has secrets you can't see—like 25 trillion red blood cells doing their job every second. What's something about your body that you've always wondered about? Who could you ask?
